AWARE, ALWAYS

Sustainability is not one-person's efforts—it is everyone's responsibility. Thanks to modernity and progress, we have slipped into a more-is-more culture of buying, upgrading and updating, despite warnings from conservationists and scientists of the repercussions of our actions on our planet. As operators of a marina, we are conscious of our contribution to this tableau and remain steadfast in our commitment to finding innovative ways to maintain a sustainable marina and marine environment.

From the ONE°15 Marina Coral Garden project, to eliminating single-use plastic, to encouraging recycling, we remind ourselves and Members of our roles in maintaining a sustainable environment.

As part of our efforts in reducing plastic usage, we implemented paper takeaway boxes at our restaurants, store drinking water in glass bottles in our hotel rooms, and positioned recycling bins at the marina gates and in the hotel rooms. We have also installed three CollecThors to collect solid and liquid marine waste. These machines can handle up to 100kg of waste.

Last year, we launched the Blue Water EduFest, which culminated in a Marina Clean Up—you can read about them in this issue's Happenings

TO US, BEING
AS MAINTAINING
OUR STANDARDS
AS A WORLD-
CLASS MARINA.

(page 40). Such events that reaffirm our commitment are intended as regular annual events, and Senior Manager of Marketing and Sustainability Esther Ang manages this aspect. Read about her inspirations, as well as her vision for the Club's sustainable future on page 20.

To that end, we have also dedicated this issue of Longitude to the theme. On the heels of Blue Water Heroes Awards—which was part of the four-day Blue Water EduFest—we profile the 21-year-old winner Melati Riyanto Wijzen (page 22). It is commendable how she and her sister vowed to rid Bali of single-use plastic through their organisation Bye Bye Plastic Bags. That they started at the young ages of 12 and 10 years, respectively, is inspiring on a whole other level. Fun Facts (page 9) highlights the ill-effects of our callous lifestyle choices on the marine environment and how mindful practices can make a difference. In Fine Food (page 24), we look at edible greens that grow along our coastlines and can be part of our diet.

International Women's Day falls on 8 March, making it timely to celebrate strong-willed and enterprising women. Aside from the aforementioned women, we profile entrepreneur Natalie Morales-Arias (page 18). Get a glimpse into her extraordinary career experiences and how it has affirmed her vision for her future and that of the world around her.

To us, being sustainable is as important as maintaining our standards as a world-class marina. We are proud to be accredited Superyacht Ready by Marina Industries Association (MIA). ONE°15 Marina Sentosa Cove is one of the first seven marinas in the world and the first in Asia to receive it. This newly launched recognition by MIA promotes our capacity and capability to provide safe and adequate berthing for superyachts. On that note, we are pleased to welcome SU, an 88ft superyacht, to our marina.

As celebrations go, it was great to see Members coming in for reunion dinners and marking the Chinese New Year period with the Club. We hope you enjoyed sharing our CNY goodies from the ONE°15 e-shop with your near and dear ones.

With March being the period of school holidays, we have planned a host of activities—from family brunches and fitness programmes, to educational activities. We have also introduced a new activity: A 3D2N Tioman Diving Trip with White Manta Diving. The Club Buzz section (page 32 onwards) lists them all.

We are forever grateful to have you along in our sustainability journey. Here's wishing one and all a Happy Easter!

RAISE A GLASS TO THE COLOUR GREEN WITH ICONIC ACCESSORIES IN VARIOUS SHADES AND DESIGNS.

TEXT YING RUI

Star Struck

Created in 1937, the Hermès classic scarf—Le Carré or “silk square”—has become a staple of the French fashion house. A great wardrobe essential for both men and women, it can be worn around the neck, as a headband, as a belt or even as a bag accessory. This 70cm silk scarf with hand-rolled edges is designed by Daiske Nomura who is inspired by manga and animation from Japanese culture. The classic equestrian and Greek mythological influences are there, but he has put a spin on it with gothic flair with skeletons on horseback.

New Look

Matthieu Blazy continues to delight with the fresh looks he's creating at Bottega Veneta. The Parisian designer's new range of bags showcase the house's signature intrecciato weave. You might be familiar with the Sardine which is a favourite of Kendall Jenner, but for spring/summer 2023, the roomy Solstice shoulder bag in a utilitarian green with elegant goldtone hardware is the new must-have. The Solstice bag is available at #01-04 ION Orchard and bottogaveneta.com

Lustrous Gem

If you have a round or oval face, pick a pair of square frame glasses. And what could be more stylish than a pair of bold Chanel sunglasses with gorgeous glass pearls? With a beautiful dark green acetate frame and gradient green lenses, the statement design adds more balance to oblong features, and will help your face appear longer and thinner. They even offer two fits for this design—be it a low or high nose bridge—to ensure it sits well on your face. Chanel's square sunglasses are available at chanel.com

Evergreen Beauty

From open bangles adorned with turning cylinders to turning rings, Piaget's Possession collection is unabashedly playful. More than just jewellery with diamonds, the designs with malachite can serve as your good luck charm. Malachite is a protective stone that helps to clear away negative energies and is the stone of transformation which can grant you courage to make change. Engrave the pendant with a special date, initials or symbol, and you can choose which side you would like to show: The expertly engraved side or the one showcasing the vibrant malachite cabochon. Piaget is available at #02-12A Ngee Ann City S.C and piaget.com

Back To Nature

Hublot's ceramic bracelet watch celebrates the vibrant colour while holding its own as a distinctive piece. The bracelet itself is composed of 22 ceramic elements, each requiring a special tool, mould and process. The UNICO V2 is a manufacture chronograph movement, which is built from scratch and therefore a rarity. Available in a limited edition of 250 pieces, the 42mm jungle green ceramic Big Bang Integral is inspired by tropical rainforests. Hublot has pushed the boundaries of ceramic by increasing the hardness and scratch resistance of the lightweight material which has low thermal conductivity and is hypoallergenic. The Big Bang Integral Ceramic is available at #01-58 The Shoppes at Marina Bay Sands

Saving The Blue

RESPONSIBLE PRACTISES AND MINDFUL CONSUMPTION THAT CAN HELP SAVE OUR WATERS.

Plastic requires petroleum for its manufacture, which is obtained by drilling the ocean. Spills during the process end up polluting the waters, severely damaging its ecosystems. Recycling, rather than production cuts that vicious cycle.

Abandoned, lost or otherwise discarded fishing gear or “ghost gear” cause indiscriminate harm to marine animals. Practise responsible fishing such as following the area’s regulations, disposing gear in recycle receptacles and/or cleaning all gear properly before it goes back in the waters.

Human-driven activities release more carbon dioxide. This gets dissolved into the ocean, interfering with its pH levels and making it more acidic. High acidity causes fish to lose their ability to identify predators—which throws the marine food chain off balance.

When trash ends up in landfills, the debris breaks down, releasing leachate, toxins and greenhouse gases into the air. Reducing waste prevents these from being carried by the breeze into the ocean.

AVOID PRODUCTS THAT CONTAIN POLYETHYLENE AND POLYPROPYLENE—PLASTIC MICROBEADS FOUND IN COSMETICS AND OTHER PERSONAL CARE PRODUCTS. THEY ARE TOXIC TO MARINE LIFE AND ENTER THE WATERS THROUGH THE SEWER SYSTEMS.

NISEKO, JAPAN

Winterscapes offer opportunities for adventure that are a world unto their own. Experience the best of what the Hokkaido town and mountain range have to offer thrillseekers with its lengthy list of wintertime adventures, especially skiing and snowboarding. The powder that falls on Mt. Niseko Annupuri is the best you can get in Asia. Every year, the tourism board releases a variety of trails, from easy, beginner-friendly paths to more complex, pro-level hikes, so there's something for every skill level. For an added challenge, try their nighttime trails!

When you're done catching your adrenaline high for the day, unwind at any of the resorts and ski lodges on-site, or at some of Niseko's famed outdoor hot springs. The likes of Yugokorotei and Makkari Hot Spring are geothermally heated and feature stunning views of the pristine landscape as you soak.

SIARGAO ISLAND, PHILIPPINES

Lauded as the best island in Asia by Condé Nast Traveller in 2019 is Siargao Island in the Philippines. It's easy to see why: The tropical island looks like something out of a storybook, decorated with lush coconut palm trees, white sand beaches, and azure blue waters so clear, you can see the fish swim by. Located in northeast Mindanao, getting there requires you to either take a flight or a ferry from Manila. Once you've arrived, a wealth of excitement awaits you—all you have to decide is what best suits your fancy and appetite for adventure. Note that there are multiple smaller islands that make up the area, apart from the popular General Luna beach and Dapa Town.

Surfing is huge in Siargao, with surf schools catered to novices who might not be as familiar with the sport. Other water sports are equally abundant here, especially kayaking across the multiple lagoons and islands, and cliff jumping from some of the area's highest rock formations. On-land activities are also abundant, as there are several hiking trails you can embark on to see different facets of what Siargao Island have to offer. Definitely add the Taktak Waterfall to your list, as it's a great one for photographs, but also for a quick swim.

PLAY

Once back in mainland Manila, catch some R&R time by booking yourself a stay at Subic Bay Yacht Club (subicbayyachtclub.ph), with stellar service and hospitality.

DENALI, ALASKA

Denali offers mountaineers a truly novel experience set amidst the Alaskan wilderness. The Denali mountain is the highest mountain peak in North America, and is the third most prominent peak in the world, standing at 6.19km above sea level. It is a beacon for alpine climbers, who plan expeditions to traverse the titan of a range during the colder months. Expeditions typically take around 16 days, so scaling Denali is definitely not one for amateurs.

The wider expanse that is Denali National Park does have a small selection of trails for avid hikers year-round, most of which don't require you to have a ton of expertise. The park is over six million acres, so some forward planning is required to make the most of your trip. Off-trail hikes are possible as well, but be prepared to encounter some of the national park's wildlife, from docile deer and sheep, to towering moose and the errant bear.

PLAY

Any trip to Alaska requires a pitstop in Canada, so make the most of your stay by visiting West Vancouver, and spending the day at the Hollyburn Country Club (hollyburn.org). The top-tier sports facility and the recreational club has a wide selection of fitness programs to choose from.

MARGARET RIVER, AUSTRALIA

Beyond its wines, Margaret River is also known as a marvel of the surfing world, which makes this aquamarine gem in Perth bucket-list material for any avid surfer. The coastline sprawls over 135km, with 75 breaks for surfers to grapple with. Whether you're a novice or pro, Margaret River offers you an opportunity to feel the glide amongst world-class waves and reconnect with the heartbeat of nature here. Surfing boot camps are available if you'd like a 101, or just a quick refresher before getting your feet wet. The beaches are also home to a number of local artisans who make their own surfboards specifically catered to the waves at Margaret River, as well as masterclasses where you can learn how to craft your own board with sustainable materials.

The thrill of catching waves is Margaret River's greatest draw, but the region also has a number of other once-in-a-lifetime adventures to sink your teeth into. Offroad biking is a huge pastime here, and so are snorkelling and coasteering. The latter is better known as rock jumping, where you careen off a 3m-high rock formation into the crystalline waters of the Indian Ocean. Travellers truly keen to push themselves to their limits can embark on a caving adventure, where you canvass labyrinthine karst formations that date back a million years.

Cross-country cyclists in Asia often have the Bangkok-Phuket trail on their bucket list, so this is your call to take the leap if you haven't already. Definitely not one for total beginners, this trail takes you through 810km across a week, travelling from Bangkok up to Phuket on road bikes. Along the way, you'll be able to spot iconic sights unique to this bike trail. Cha-Am Beach is a frequent pitstop, as the quiet beach is ideal for a midday dip to cool off, or to catch the sunset. Khao Sam Roi Yot National Park and its limestone formations are another natural wonder you'll get to explore, along with vast swathes of rural Thailand rarely seen by city slickers.

On average, you'll be cycling for up to 80km a day, on relatively flat ground. The maximum climb on these trails is up to 150m, great for intermediate-level cyclists and up. # LEGACY OF LIFE

FOR STRATEGIC PARTNERSHIPS CONSULTANT
NATALIE MORALES-ARIAS, PHILANTHROPY,
SUSTAINABILITY AND HEALTHY LIVING
ARE ALL PART OF A DAY'S WORK.

TEXT SANDHYA MAHADEVAN PHOTOGRAPHY BENNY LOH ART DIRECTION CHARLENE LEE

Natalie Morales-Arias walks in wearing a flowing black dress that complements her athletic yet petite frame perfectly and exudes a chic island vibe. It's by Diesel and "the credit goes to my husband David", she says when I compliment her on her outfit, adding that the brand has rarely let them down.

Even though her brand affiliation was not the point in question, the conviction in her voice is like a doorway to Natalie's personality. There's a sure sense of loyalty in the way she articulates her choices and ideas. And now as Founder and Executive Director of Palm Gate Asia, a vehicle for introducing and directing private capital from family offices to sustainable projects in Asia, she considers it even more imperative to live by the characteristics she has honed through the years.

A DIFFERENT WORLD

Growing up in Cape Town, South Africa, Natalie was surrounded by the sun and sea. "Western Cape, like Singapore, is one of the world's most beautiful oceanic cities, so you're never far away from the sea. My mother also lives on a four-kilometre stretch of beach that I used to run on every morning before breakfast," recalls Natalie fondly. She was also a professional swimmer from the age of six to 14 and has won numerous service awards for the United Sports Association of South Africa.

Moving from there to London in 2007, as a fresh graduate of Business Science and Honours degree in Economics from the University of Cape Town, she knew that she would have a lot to get used to. However, the dramatic direction her life took, thanks to her job working closely with family offices, was unexpected although life changing.

Natalie was working with asset classes, sourcing and procuring luxury real estate, gemstones and other accoutrements of the ultra-high-net-worth class. Working with the top one-percent of wealth and power, Natalie experienced a different London to her peers—"it was very fun", she laughs.

From business development and investment, to planning luxury holidays and coordinating the extended families' citizenship and school applications, Natalie was doing it all. At one moment, she would be closing the deal for a hotel development on a private island, and on the other, booking a yacht or private plane charter or organising a private chef. Natalie had to be and was always a step ahead of her employer while being just a phone call away with all the details at her fingertips.

Being able to think on your feet, being honest, loyal, and commercially accurate were key, says Natalie. "It's not about sourcing and procuring the world's most beautiful things. They are looking to see ideas and commercial acumen in every single conversation. If not, you lose your job," she adds, of also the cut-throat culture that pervaded such offices.

FINDING NEW DEFINITION

With this kind of immersion into an extraordinary lifestyle and exposure to unlimited resources, it is hardly surprising that Natalie decided to start her own firm. She credits her first boss for nurturing her entrepreneurial spirit and her father for insisting she only embark on projects she truly believed in.

"I was just 20 years old, and he gave me excellent resources and insights into greater wealth as well as access to different forums," she says of her former boss. "I learnt what it means to develop, nurture and nourish long-term professional relationships with other families—not my own. It was a critical turning point in my life."

She also started to understand the power of these conglomerates and the concept of investments for the long term. "That's where it helped me choose who and what cause I would support because I knew that once the due diligence was done, the money would actually make an impact," she adds.

Her desire for meaningful pursuits stirred, Natalie started dedicating her annual leave to volunteerism—including providing event services for The Elton John AIDS Foundation Winter Ball 2010 in association with Jean Paul Gaultier and helping launch Modi Enterprises, India's, Floodlight foundation for artists alongside Frieze London 2017.

As her work involved cultural and political diplomacy, Natalie went on to obtain a few United Nations (UN) certifications to fuel her passions and complement her work. "When I was working for the sovereign wealth fund of Qatar, they sponsored personal development, and because I was working with diplomats on a daily basis, I did Cultural Diplomacy and Protocol," she explains.

For UN International Peace Day 2016, she was invited to be assistant director for a live UN broadcast with Jeremy Gilley's non-profit organisation Peace One Day, with its ambassador, actor Jude Law.

INVESTING IN THE FUTURE

When Singapore came calling in the form of a proposal from her then-boyfriend David Morales-Arias, Natalie moved here without a second thought in 2019. On the heels of the pandemic and Singapore's rising status as a "safe haven", Natalie was exactly where she needed to be given her commercial prowess, and the nation's Green Plan inspired her to make conservation the mission-statement of her entrepreneurial venture.

A chance to negotiate an impact contract while working with the Global CIO office in Singapore further boosted her confidence and affirmed Palm Gate Asia's focus. Natalie had to source for an alternate energy solution—hydrogen—for a maritime services conglomerate based in Egypt. She closed the deal for the first phase of partnership between them and a US environmental technology solutions company.

"A key event in my career where I was able to combine my experience in family offices with nature conservation," she enthuses. Natalie was able to leverage that experience in winning Palm Gate Asia's first contract in September 2021, for a Singapore-owned private technology fund with a sustainability focus.

In that realm, ocean conservation is topmost on her priority list, given that it is a passion she shares with her husband—"that's why David and I joined the Club," she explains. Post ONE°15 Marina Sentosa Cove's inaugural Blue Water EduFest, Natalie has also started volunteering at ONE°15 Marina Coral Garden.

As milestones go, Natalie has already notched up a few—she has certifications in functional medicine, yoga and UX design. She also plans to get her diving and jet ski licenses this year.

She has her eyes set for a future when David and she would have their own family office—"I will chair its philanthropic arm," she says.

Moving to Singapore has also given her a unique perspective into how wealth is perceived in Asia—the difference between flashy extravagance and discreet yet state-of-the-art indulgences.

Asia has also taught her patience and in effect broadened her horizons. "I believe my first-hand experience in liaising between the East, West and Middle East cultures inspires great strategic partnerships to be developed." 🌿

FOR ESTHER ANG, SENIOR MANAGER OF MARKETING AND SUSTAINABILITY, NO TASK IS IMPOSSIBLE TO ACHIEVE.

TEXT SANDHYA MAHADEVAN PHOTOGRAPHY ONE°15 MARINA SENTOSA COVE

P etite with a ready smile on her face, Esther Ang started her career as a writer for sports and health magazines, as well as websites and marketing collaterals, so when she joined ONE°15 Marina Sentosa Cove seven years ago as the Marketing Manager, she was right where she needed to be. Add to that, it was her second time at the marina—her first stint here was in 2008—making it a homecoming of sorts, and a place she could grow and nurture her dreams. She has since been involved in the marina's sustainability projects, with the ONE°15 Marina Coral Garden, which she helped launch, one especially close to her heart.

Esther has always believed that sustainability has to start from home, and true enough, she tries to ensure her house is devoid of single-use plastics—even if it means breaking through certain age-old notions of elders. With her two children, aged three and four years, every little game she plays with them has an eco-lesson.

She tries to be green both at home and at work, which is why she has embarked on this role as the Senior Manager of Marketing and Sustainability. Here, she shares about her career thus far, and future aspirations to ensure cleaner waters in the marina and beyond.

What is the best part of your job?

Heading the marketing department, definitely. It is the voice of the company and influences the way the brand is perceived. The challenge is ensuring that our Members and audience get the right message from every collateral, video, advertisement, and event that is put up. When I'm able to elevate the standards of the brand and Members are happy with their experience at the Club—that gives me the most satisfaction.

Is there an advice that has guided you through life?

"Don't ever think or tell yourself that something is too hard to do. If you put your mind to it, you can do it. Giving up should not be an option."—my mother said that to me. I was studying business and communications at an Australian university, and I had called her to say that I didn't think I could make it through. I was 21 and alone in a foreign country—I suppose the culture shock and loneliness got to me.

Her words changed my life, and to date, I will never let anyone put me down or deter me from what I want to do. Because I know that if I want to do it, I can achieve it. Not everything can be yours, it also involves learning to manage one's expectations. If something doesn't work out the way I imagined, I just must try again. The question to ask should not be to the universe but as to how you can do things better the next time around.

What is your advice to your team?

My role as a mentor is to push people to grow and constantly challenge the status quo. Youngsters now are also more aware, so we have to be very creative about the way we educate and motivate our staff. I tell them that they should be better when they leave the company than when they first joined. If that does not happen, I have failed as their manager.

The world around us is constantly evolving, and advancing, and we have to keep up. We should be on the constant quest for value, both for ourselves and the company, and upskill ourselves. Learning and growing are two things I strongly advocate and believe in.

What about you personally? How has the learning come about for you?

My bosses have never pushed me as much as I push my team (laughs). But I have also been lucky to have had very good bosses throughout my career. I look up to them. My key learning has been from observing them closely—their interpersonal interactions, managerial skills, how they conduct meetings and provide solutions, and steer the team.

What is the learning you value most at ONE°15 Marina Sentosa Cove?

I am grateful for being put in charge of the ONE°15 Marina Coral Garden where I got to learn a lot from our Eco Advisors. Learning about corals and ocean life has changed my perspective on environmental responsibility and influenced my lifestyle choices.

Are you a different person now than when you joined?

As a manager, my leadership and decision-making skills are constantly tested and have been sharpened throughout the years. When I restarted at the marina in 2016, there were three staff under me. Now, the marketing team has expanded to six including myself. During this time, COVID-19 happened, and we were rushing like everyone else to go online. We set up our e-shop and blog, as well as a digital services department, which required a whole new set of knowledge and expertise. Throughout my seven years here, there have been some periods with steep learning curves. But I would put all these towards necessary experiences tagged with valuable lessons.

Who has inspired you the most in life?

My university lecturers in Australia. They used to craft feature stories that advocated rights for underprivileged communities—disabled, LGBT, child workers, etc. One of my lecturers was the media consultant to the then Prime Minister of Australia. I also had an American facilitator who was a war correspondent. My classmates were inspiring as well. One of them wanted to conceive educational materials that she could distribute to educate underprivileged Colombian women who were not allowed to study. That was her objective for joining the communications course. All of them used the pen to advocate societal causes and demonstrated its power. It made me realise what a powerful tool it was, and it has been my best friend since.

How do you manage work/life balance?

Playing with my two children is the best time of my day—it's a form of de-stressing for me. My job is quite hectic and switching off can be a challenge sometimes. I try to work out my own work/life balance. I aim to leave at 6pm on the dot from work, so I can spend time with my children before they sleep. Even if it is just an hour before they get to bed, that time is important to me.

I find time to work whenever I can. For example, after my children have gone to sleep at night, when they are taking afternoon naps, during my commute, when waiting at a restaurant, and the like.

What gets you out of bed every morning?

I am blessed to be in a job that I love. There is never a same day at ONE°15 Marina. I wake up to new tasks, new challenges and new conversations everyday!

ESTHER'S TOP 3

FOOD

I am a true-blue Singaporean so I enjoy lots of food. The top cuisines on my list would be Italian, Mexican, Japanese and Thai. I also like to cook. I stayed with a Japanese family in Australia, and learnt to cook many Japanese dishes. So, my signature cuisine to cook would be Japanese.

ME-TIME

Sometimes, I will take a day off mid-week so I can enjoy shopping in half-empty malls, which can be quite therapeutic.

CONSCIOUS

I guess sustainability has always been in me. I am a minimalist and I have just one of everything—one pair of heels, one pair of flats, one handbag, one set of cosmetics, a pair of spectacles, one mobile phone... I keep the furnishing in my house as minimalistic as possible as well.

What are your sustainability goals for the Club in your new role?

Sentosa has formed the Sentosa Carbon Neutral Network (SCNN) with an aim to achieve carbon neutrality by 2030, and ONE°15 Marina has joined SCNN to support their goal. One of my immediate tasks is to commission a study to benchmark our greenhouse gas emissions, develop a roadmap on how we can reduce them by making modifications to our hardware and operations, and obtain internationally recognised green certifications for our Clubhouse and marina.

Ocean conservation is key to us and events such as Blue Water EduFest will remain mainstays. I will also continue to develop the ONE°15 Marina Coral Garden and volunteer programme/engagement with other stakeholders like our Eco Advisors.

ONE°15 Marina is green-conscious to the extent that a sustainability role is built within the company, and we are taking genuine steps to reduce our carbon and plastic footprint, and educate our Members and audience. Sustainability is not a single-person effort, it takes the convergence of many people and minds. 🌱

EARNEST, DETERMINED AND DRIVEN, 21 YEAR OLD MELATI RIYANTO WIJSEN SHOWS NO SIGNS OF SLOWING DOWN IN HER QUEST TO MAKE THE WORLD A BETTER PLACE.

It was the evening of 4 November 2022, one of the four nights of ONE*15 Marina Sentosa Cove's inaugural event on marine conservation. A young 21-year-old was awarded the first place in Blue Water Heroes Awards 2022.

Melati Riyanto Wijzen, co-founder of Bye Bye Plastic Bags (BBPB) was selected for her dedicated work in ridding Bali of single-use plastic and role in advancing the conversation thereof on marine conservation through education. Clad in a chic white shorts suit, Melati exuded humility in her acceptance speech, but her determination and one-mindedness to empower youth was unmistakable.

It's the same vibe she exudes as I sit down to chat with her—she is cheerful, personable and communicates with a confidence that is beyond her age.

"We are almost headed into our 10-year anniversary," she says excitedly. "It is pretty insane to think we've been at it for a decade."

EARLY STARTERS

Melati co-founded BBPB with her sister Isabel in 2013. She was then 12 years old and Isabel two years her junior.

Growing up in the island of Bali, the belief system of which is centered around living harmoniously with God, nature and people was the perfect gateway into a life of sustainability. However, it was sadly corrupted by the curse of modern society—single-use plastic.

It was everywhere, says Melati. "It really didn't matter what occasion or what event we were at, whether it was a weekend with friends at the beach, learning how to surf or going for walks with our dog through the rice fields, there was always a pile of plastic. At one point, my sister and I just looked at each other and said 'what are we going to do about it?'"

The siblings launched BBPB with no business plan or strategy but just a single-minded goal. They rallied their friends and did all they could to attract the attention of the authorities—from a fashion runway showcasing clothes made of plastic trash, to raising awareness among local villagers, to straightforward campaigning against plastic.

The authorities found their spirit endearing. "Being children I think has been our superpower; our age was our super weapon that turned the heads of people in any room we walked into. We got the attention and inspired people," says Melati. "The challenge, however, was being taken seriously."

Their relentlessness paid off and today, single-use plastic is banned in Bali. Execution may still be a work in progress, but Melati remains positive and has it tagged in her five-year-goal list. Add to that, BBPB escalated from being a youth-led movement to something that everyone on the island wanted to stand behind—their secret weapon as it turned out was also bringing attention to the issue at the right time, adds Melati. BBPB today has 60 volunteer-led teams around the world.

NATURE AND NURTURE

Melati puts a lot of her verve and drive to her upbringing. "Because my parents came from two totally different cultures—her father is Indonesian and mother is Dutch—there was also that benefit of them creating a special world for me and my sister and a culture of our family on our own."

This extended right from their early schooling at Green School to never brushing aside any of their ideas and aspirations, no matter how childish or impractical they were. Instead, "they would always look at us straight-faced and serious and say: 'That's great. What's your action plan? What are you going to do about it?'"

With BBPB picking up speed very quickly, the siblings were travelling to international conferences—as attendees, keynote speakers, co-chairs and more. In 2020, Melati was invited to speak at the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland. Their mother, Elvira Wijsen, chose to give up her real estate business to be their chaperone, and remains a full-time volunteer with the organisation.

AWARENESS AND BEYOND

For Melati, the stage had been set—she wanted to be a changemaker, full-time. Working out an intense time-management schedule, juggling school with conference schedules, she fast-tracked her way through high school and graduated a year early.

It was doable because Melati's priorities were clear. "I really wanted to focus on learning as much as possible, but ironically, I didn't feel like I did that when I was at school. I wanted to do that in the conference halls with scientists that I was sitting in front of and the young people I was meeting. This is where I thrive the most," she says.

Sure enough, BBPB works closely with schools on creating awareness and urging sustainability focus in curriculums. It even set up an incentive-based programme called English for Trash, that clubs volunteerism with conversational English education.

As someone who didn't have a precedent to base her strategy on when she started out, it is very important to Melati to have a support system that can help young, aspiring changemakers and guide them in their conservation journey. Youthtopia, which she founded in 2020, responds to the eternal question on young minds on how they can be a Melati themselves.

"Young Indonesians are now super switched-on and understand the problem. The students we used to campaign with, now have a solid understanding of what is going on," says Melati, proud that the team is now fully locally led. "I think it's really because of the access to the education and the inspiration that the movement has provided for them."

That quest to learn and share knowledge continued in her on-screen debut with French scriptwriter Flor Vasseur's Bigger Than Us—which was released in 2021—which sees Melati going on a journey around the world meeting young changemakers such as herself. "I learnt about the refugee crisis, agriculture, freedom of speech and many other ongoing challenges faced around the world, as well as how young people are leading the way with solutions. It was as if my plastic bubble burst," she laughs.

THEN, NOW AND TOMORROW

One wonders if there's another side to this influential changemaker, given that she never got to be a regular tween, teenager or the young adult that she now is.

"I think that's something I learnt very quickly, that, in order to build a movement and push it out to be as big as BBPB did, it had to come from the most authentic place ever. As a 12-year-old, that was easy to tap into because it was not intention-driven by greed, political gain, pride or ego," says Melati. She remains that person—whether she is in a conference, on-stage at the United Nations, or at a sleepover with Isabel and friends.

Today, she knows that she is not alone in her quest and she hopes to similarly empower youth by creating opportunities. "I want every young person to be able to see themselves in my story." 📌

SALADS BY THE SEA

NUTRITIOUS AND SUSTAINABLE
SEA SUCCULENTS AND HERBS TO INCLUDE IN YOUR DIET.

TEXT AMY VAN

Edible sea plants and herbs thrive in different parts of the world and are becoming ever more popular. As they grow abundantly in coastal areas, they are imbued with a natural salty flavour making them delicious—not to mention a sustainable addition to your meal.

Will they become more mainstream? After all, some have been used by different cultures for centuries. Chefs today are increasingly incorporating them into their menus that they are becoming mainstays in supermarket shelves in places such as Australia and the UK.

At ONE°15 Marina Sentosa Cove, freshly harvested greens from ONE°15 Flora Garden assert similar sustainability practices.

Sea Lettuce

Sea lettuce has been used for centuries as food and medicine. As its name suggests, this algae resembles a lettuce leaf with frilly edges. This translucent bright green marine plant can be found in temperate and tropical areas, usually floating in ocean water or attached on reefs and rock pool edges.

It is packed with loads of protein, soluble fibre, vitamins and minerals including vitamin C, iron, calcium, potassium and omega-3 fatty acids. Hence it is especially nutritious for vegan, vegetarian, and raw food diets. As it has a rich umami flavour, sea lettuce is dehydrated into crisps and sprinkled over dishes. It can be cooked in soups or eaten raw in salads.

In Japan, sea lettuce is known as aosa. It is also consumed in China, Scandinavia, and Ireland. In Italy, it is part of a typical Neapolitan dish called sea zeppole—a fritter of sorts.

FUN FACT

Sea lettuce can grow quickly under the right conditions. The detached fronds will continue to bloom abundantly and create massive floating colonies on the water—it is incredibly fertile even as an unattached plant. It is therefore popular in tank-based aquaculture.

FUN FACT

Historical records report that European monasteries have utilised the plant for medical purposes. The natives of Alaska's Aleutian Islands believe that Mertensia maritima can cure scurvy.

Oyster Plant

The oyster plant acquired its name because the taste of the silver grey leaves is reminiscent of oysters. They have a touch of salty, mineral aftertaste and earthy aroma. The leaves are thick and smooth with a succulent texture.

It grows wild and relatively fast in the cold and harsh coastal climates of the Northern Hemisphere. Also known as “sea bluebells” or Mertensia maritima, it is native to the northern coasts of England and Scotland but also found as far north as Canada and Greenland.

Often referred to as “vegetarian oysters”, the leaves are great as a garnish and to complement an oyster platter or a mushroom dish. They can be steamed or used in salads and dips. The high-protein leaves pair well with herbs such as basil, mint, dill, and parsley.

Sea Aster

Found scattered across the coast of the UK, sea aster is resilient to strong winds and waves. It grows in salt-marshes and estuaries and occasionally on cliffs. The plant flowers from July to October, and is well loved in British gardens since Elizabethan times (1558–1603).

Sea aster is rich in vitamins A, C and D, and contains high levels of iron. The long grey green leaves of this wild edible plant are superbly tender and salty with a complex sweet flavour. Cook them with butter, or lightly steam and serve with seafood. The flowers can be added to salad, used for garnish or in tea blends. They have a balsam-like scent when crushed.

FUN FACT

Sea aster flowers have a pretty star shape. Hence the name “aster”, which is Greek for “star”.

Sea Purslane

Sea purslane is a flowering succulent that grows on sand banks and in salty wet marshland areas. It is found in many parts of the world, and blooms abundantly on the south coast of England.

The plant has tiny pink, star-shaped flowers, and the leaves are matte green with a plump texture and sea-salt taste. This succulent plant contains about 93 per cent water. Purslane is loaded with vitamins A, C, B complex, and minerals including magnesium, calcium, potassium, and omega-3 fatty acids.

The leaves are commonly used for cooking as they have a taste that is similar to spinach and watercress. Sea purslane is at its saltiest when eaten raw—so it is best to use it in small amounts or as garnish. Blanching or steaming the leaves helps remove some of the sharp flavours. Beware of overcooking them as well as they tend to develop a bitter taste. Add a dash of lemon or lightly coat with butter and serve along with fish or seafood.

FUN FACT

Sea purslane has medicinal applications in many cultures—both in the West and East. Traditional Chinese Medicine refers to it as Ma Chi Xian—the vegetable for long life.

Samphire

Samphire is a temperate succulent that grows in rocky and marshy areas near saltwater sources like shorelines and mudflats. Marsh samphire is more widely available than rock samphire.

Samphire is also known as sea beans and sea asparagus as it resembles tiny asparagus. It is high in vitamin A and a good source of calcium and iron. The plant has bright green stalks with a distinctively crisp and salty taste. The stalks can be savoured raw in salad but tends to taste very salty. Rinse them thoroughly to remove excess salt before eating.

They are best served either blanched or lightly steamed. Tossed with butter or olive oil, samphire makes a great accompaniment to fish and shellfish, and even lamb dishes.

FUN FACT

Aboriginal Australians have for long used samphire as bush tucker, thanks to its abundance and nutritional value. Considered endemic and unique to Australia, the plant is also considered vital to the continent's coastal ecosystem.

Coastal Rosemary

A silvery version of the rosemary plant, this variety—Westringia fruticosa—grows in coastal areas in different parts of Australia. The hardy herb is found in sand dunes and on limestone and rocky slopes along the coastline. It is commonly known as the “coastal daisybush”. The name “wild rosemary” was said to be given by European colonists who noticed the plant’s resemblance to English rosemary. Plant breeders have come up with new varieties of coastal rosemary as it is easily cultivated.

With a warm and grassy aroma and flavour, the leaves can be used fresh or dried for a range of savoury and sweet dishes. As it grows near the sea, the coastal rosemary develops a natural saltiness that makes a great seasoning for white fish dishes. Chop the herb finely and add to sea salt to create a delicious rub for fish. 📖

Widely used in food flavouring, this sea herb is also popular among some indigenous communities for its insect-repelling properties.

Blue Water EduFest 2022

The Club ended 2022 with an event that affirmed its commitment to sustainability. The inaugural Blue Water EduFest, held between 3 and 6 November, brought to our shores, experts from the scientific community, environmental agencies, corporations, and non-governmental agencies who were committed to furthering the conversation on marine conservation.

Minister Desmond Lee was the event's Guest of Honour. In his opening speech, he highlighted Singapore's efforts in the arena, including 2021 Marine Climate Change Science, and the launch of the country's first turtle hatchery and various community partnerships. He also shared its long-term mission for a Green Singapore.

The four-day event kicked off with The Ocean Collective Summit (TOCS) organised by The International SeaKeepers Society Asia, and in collaboration with famed oceanographer Fabien Cousteau's—grandson of the iconic Jacques Cousteau—Ocean Learning Center. The two-day conference had an exciting line-up of lectures and fireside chats, as well as panel discussions with experts and leaders on the state of our marine ecosystems, existing infrastructures, and explored how the use of innovative technology can help reduce our carbon footprint over time.

Cousteau's insight on marine conservation at the heel of his team embarking on Mission 31—the longest science expedition to take place at Aquarius, the world's only underwater marine laboratory located in the Florida Keys—proved valuable. He urged increased and immediate action towards preserving our marine biodiversity.

As a fitting acknowledgement of the region's efforts, Blue Water EduFest also hosted the Blue Water Heroes Awards on 4 November. Held in partnership with Gen.T, a community and events platform for younger leaders by Tatler Asia Group, the event brought together conservation champions from around Southeast Asia, handpicked by experts through a quantitative and qualitative analysis of their efforts in the preservation of their native marine environment, use of innovative technology and their vision for a collective future. Three winners out of the 10 finalists were crowned Blue Water Heroes 2022 at the end of the evening. Chairman and CEO of SUTL Group Arthur Tay hoped that this would be a precursor for many more.

Each evening was capped with networking cocktail events and stellar performances by 10-year-old piano prodigy, Mikkel Myer Lee, and local icon, jazz vocalist Joanna Dong.

Blue Water EduFest – Marina Clean Up

The Club's inaugural Blue Water EduFest culminated in a marina cleanup on 6 November that brought 106 volunteers, both divers and non-divers, to ONE°15 Marina Sentosa Cove. The participants came from equally diverse backgrounds, from event sponsors to conference delegates to students, and age groups—from a six-year-old to a 70-year-old. They all came together to make a stand for the future of marine conservation.

This was also extra special for the Club, as it was able to organise this mainstay event after a two-year hiatus due to the pandemic. Marina Director, James Roy kicked off the Marina Clean Up with a welcome speech followed by safety briefings conducted by Assistant Manager, Marina, Tasrin Toming, Director of White Manta Diving, Vincent Chew, and ONE°15 Eco Advisor and Co-founder of Our Singapore Reefs, Sam Shu Qin.

In the one and a half hours, armed with scooping nets, gloves, mesh bags and diving gears, volunteers fanned out and combed the marina area for trash, which were then put in blue bins for sorting.

A total of 334 items, not limited to a kick scooter, bicycle, traffic cone, tyre, boat spare parts, fishing cage, anchor, trolley, and poles, had been collected, amounting to a whopping 301kg of trash!

These items were sorted into six main materials—plastic; glass and ceramic; metal; rubber and wood; cloth and paper or cardboard; and lastly mixed materials and other debris items. This attention to detail to sorting was done to facilitate efficient recycling of materials. Unrecyclable materials were segregated for use for an upcoming art exhibition.

Volunteers were then treated to a well-deserved lunch spread at Constellation Ballroom. The sense of achievement among the participants was palpable—it was a great way to give back and spend a Sunday morning as one mother-and-son duo commented. Volunteers also commented they would welcome more such meaningful events.

French Wine Dinner

It was a night of gastronomy at LATITUDE Bistro on 17 November, where classic French cuisine met fine French wine. Members savoured dishes including Ham Hock Terrine with foie gras, Coquilles Saint-Jacques and Atlantic Lobster Bisque, all of which were carefully curated so that they could be paired with wines of varying intensity and grape varieties from The Vintage Wine Club. Its Co-founder Christophe Cazaux-Maleville shared valuable insight with Members on the wines and how such pairings can intensify the experience. The air was filled with merry chatter and the sound of clinking glasses—that seemed to carry on through the night.

Dialogues with ONE°15

On 2 December, innerCove was the venue for yet another sustainability event helmed by Mathew Howe, CEO of urban vertical farm company Grobrix—a standing example of which can be seen in LATITUDE Bistro. The young entrepreneur shared his passion for sustainability and how it has evolved his perspective to life. Members also gained insight on the valuable life lessons he garnered having made the jump from banking to innovative farming. It was an interactive session where Mathew responded to a variety of questions—from his business model, to the courage it took to make that drastic career pivot and the foresight with which he was able to grow his vision from a personal balcony garden to a unique organic concept that could be the future of how people view their food in urban Singapore. Positive feedback from Members was a sure sign of the event's success and paved the way for more.

Chinese Brush Painting

Wednesdays in November was time dedicated to learning a new skill among others. Members gathered at various locations to learn the art of Chinese brush painting. The class comprised of artists of varying levels of expertise, all of whom had joined in as beginners and honed their skills under the guidance of their master, Yap Sin Guan, an accomplished artist in his own right. It was not surprising therefore to see new entrants into the class. Participants tried their hand at lifelike animals and plants, skills that one of the Members, a new student in the class, seemed to be able pick up effortlessly. Members commented that the therapeutic effect of the whole process was also what attracted them to the class.

Build Your Own Volcano Workshop

On 13 November, Captain's Table erupted with excitement, as young participants did their own take on volcanoes. Having gained knowledge of the anatomy of a volcano, they then experimented with colouring them. Each child was given a colour palette with which they gave vent to their creativity in decorating their volcano mould. That there was even a rainbow-coloured volcano was proof that no one held back. Watching the colourful explosions while having a full understanding of the various chemical reactions was yet another victory.

Coffee Filter Turkey Craft

November threw in another event to celebrate reunions. On the 20th of the month, little Members at Kids' Playroom got an introduction to the essence of Thanksgiving as well as a lesson in recycling. Children had fun taking in the knowledge they had gained of this American holiday and its evolution over the years, and putting it to paper. They crafted turkey figurines out of coffee filters—creativity intertwined with sustainability.

ONE°15 Tennis Tournament 2022

From 19 September to 3 December, 36 participants brought their tennis skills to the fore as they battled for a place in ONE°15 Tennis Tournament 2022. Two among them proved they were of championship material. Robert Hands won the Men's Singles title, and Annette Stryn, the Women's Singles title, with straight sets wins of 6-2 and 6-0 against Robert Yang, and 6-0 and 6-2 against Joy Koh, respectively.

It was a show of great sportsmanship from all sides—Stryn pressed on despite an injured elbow. There were wows, applause, and exchange of skills throughout. It's no wonder Members expressed a desire for more such tournaments so they could hone their tennis skills and network in the process.

3-day Swim Camp

There can be no better way to beat the heat on a tropical island than with a Swim Camp, and that's exactly what the participants at the Club's Infinity Pool did between 19 and 21 December. There were training sessions, team games and other exciting activities that were informative and fun at the same time. Perfecting their swim strokes gave children unmatched boost of confidence on water, not to mention helping develop their motor and coordination skills. It was undoubtedly a very intense three days, but whatever exhaustion children exhibited at the end of each day was all gone the next morning—which showed that they thoroughly enjoyed every moment of it.

Create Your Own Bath Bombs

On 11 December, Captain's Table was a laboratory of magnesium sulphate, baking soda, citric acid and essential oils as participants created their own bath bombs. Aside from the prospect of elevating their bath experience, the action of experiencing the science behind them through its ingredients was very rewarding for Members. With the essential oils adding an additional element of pleasant surprise, and the vibrant colour palette, Members couldn't wait to bring their creations home and use them.

Cardboard Gingerbread House

On 17 December, Members and their families were involved in a Christmas tradition that also challenged their engineering knowledge. Participants gathered at Kids' Playroom were each given a cardboard gingerbread house template, which they had to piece together. It was a session that allowed them to exercise their aesthetic, architectural and logical senses, as they had to figure out the right door, window and gate placements as well as decorate them with the provided coloured stickers. There was therefore elation at having built a gingerbread house of their dreams. The look of pride and satisfaction on the young faces was a sure indication of the event's success.

The H-boat was a Nordic folkboat meant for touring—the H stands for the Greek goddess of hearth, Hestia—but it became popular as a race boat in Scandinavia in the early '60s. In 1967, Finn designer developed it as a one-design keelboat in fibreglass with Danish yachtsman Paul Elvstrøm making some minor modifications in 1971. It is today one of the most popular yacht classes in the world.

Superyacht Ready Accredited

We are honoured to be one of the first seven marinas globally and the first in Asia to receive Marina Industries Association's Superyacht Ready accreditation. The Superyacht Ready criteria is based on the marina's infrastructure to accommodate superyachts, and for its accessibility, security measures and service availability.
